EXPERIENCE

Within architecture, there are spaces that transcend their original conception and become timeless masterpieces; places where light, color, and detailed infrastructure talk to one another and seamlessly blend with the environment, dancing harmoniously. Cuadra San Cristóbal, one of the most iconic creations by Mexican engineer Luis Barragán, is one such place. Here, every detail is heightened – taken to the next level, turning the visit into an unparalleled sensory experience.

For those looking for a trip beyond the everyday, Colima 71 extends an invitation to indulge in the Cuadra San Cristóbal Experience, a unique opportunity to explore the privileged mind of the only Mexican architect to have ever won the Pritzker Prize.

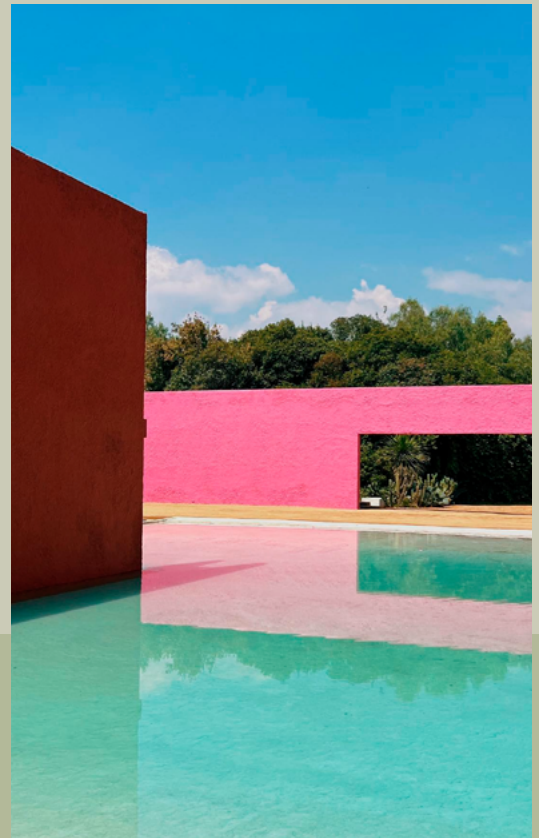

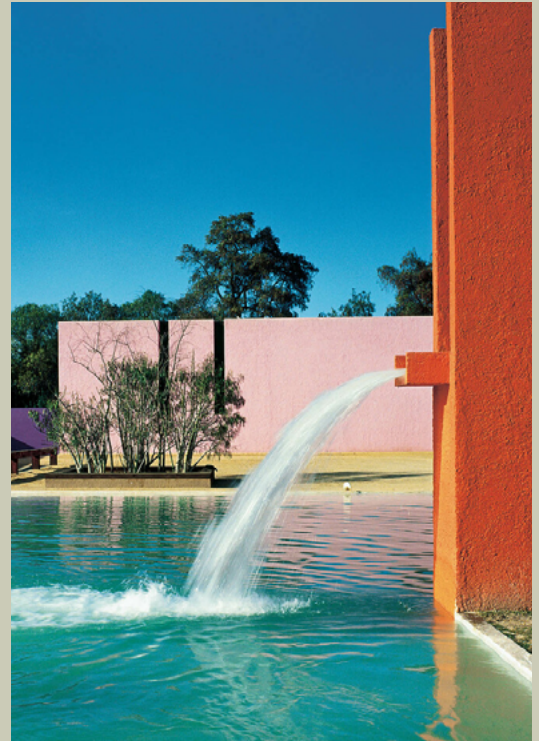

A hidden architectural sanctuary in the Valley of Mexico

On the outskirts of the town, around an hour away from our hotel in Roma Mexico City, Cuadra San Cristóbal is a space that challenges traditional architecture. Inaugurated in 1968 as part of an equestrian complex, Luis Barragán's work here not only elevates the space around but turns it into a visual spectacle – the radiance of water, dynamic geometries and the freshness of nature coexisting in perfect harmony.

Barragán is recognized for its ability to awaken emotions, inspire and transcend. Here, the vibrant pink walls and small artificial waterfall create a contemplative atmosphere where daylight bounces off and lives on every surface, casting shadows and sparkles that evolve over time.

Each element in Cuadra San Cristóbal has a clear purpose: the fountains reflect the open skies, the walls guide the gaze all along, the open spaces ignite introspection. It is not just a blueprint turned walls, it is an invitation to feel architecture set ablaze.
