The Pyramid of the Sun, standing as the third largest pyramid in the world, is the towering centerpiece of Teotihuacan's architectural landscape. Rising majestically to a height of approximately 216 feet (66 meters), this monumental structure commands attention and reverence. Its sheer size and scale evoke a sense of awe and wonder, inviting visitors to contemplate the ingenuity and labor that went into its construction.

The Pyramid of the Moon, while smaller in stature compared to its counterpart, holds equal significance in Teotihuacan's religious and ceremonial landscape. Positioned at the northern end of the Avenue of the Dead, this pyramid serves as a sacred site where rituals and offerings were made to honor the cycles of the moon and the divine forces believed to govern the cosmos. Its strategic location and architectural grandeur make it a focal point of spiritual reverence and cultural significance.

The Temple of the Feathered Serpent, also known as the Feathered Serpent Pyramid or Temple of Quetzalcoatl, represents the epitome of Teotihuacan's artistic and religious expression. Adorned with intricate stone carvings depicting feathered serpents, jaguars, and other symbolic
