The Museum of Anthropology is not only a monument to Mexican architecture but also a sanctuary that preserves the treasures of Mesoamerican civilizations. Gain a clear and in-depth understanding of the museum, and we will also take you to visit the private home and collection of its creator, architect Pedro Ramírez Vázquez, the genius behind the architecture and design of this unparalleled museum, which has no equal in any country worldwide.

Key facts about the Museo Nacional de Antropología (National Museum of Anthropology) include:

Inauguration: The museum was inaugurated on September 17, 1964, and has been a significant cultural institution for over five decades, showcasing Mexico's archaeological and ethnographic heritage.

Architectural Icon: Designed by architect Pedro Ramírez Vázquez, the museum's unique horseshoe-shaped building with a central courtyard featuring the iconic fountain "El Paraguas" (The Umbrella) is a symbol of Mexican architecture and heritage.

Collection: The museum houses over seven million archaeological pieces and five million ethnological pieces, making it one of the world's largest collections of pre-Columbian relics, artifacts, and art.

Exhibits: With 23 exhibition rooms covering diverse cultures like the Toltecs, Zapotecs, Maya, and Aztecs, the museum displays significant artifacts such as the Aztec Calendar Stone and ceremonial headdress of Aztec emperor Moctezuma.

Visitors: The Museo Nacional de Antropología is Mexico's most visited museum, attracting between 1.3 to 2.3 million visitors annually and offering a comprehensive journey through Mexico's history from prehistoric times to contemporary indigenous cultures.

These key facts highlight the museum's architectural significance, vast collection, cultural importance, and popularity as a major cultural destination in Mexico.
