Pedro Ramírez Vázquez designed the National Museum of Anthropology, which opened on 17 September 1964. The building is a horseshoe around a central courtyard, with the fountain known as El Paraguas, the Umbrella.

It has 23 permanent exhibition halls. We walk through the Mesoamerican cultures, among them the Toltec, Zapotec, Maya and Aztec, and see pieces such as the Sun Stone.

An anthropologist guides us through the halls. Afterwards, tacos at a taquería in the city.
